July 2026 at a Glance

The Palm Beach County single family home market carried its momentum into July 2026. Closed sales rose 12.7% over July 2025 while active inventory fell 23.3% - a combination that lifted the median sale price to $660,090, up 7.6% year over year. At 3.7 months of supply, down from 5.5, the single family market remains firmly in seller's-market territory.

Two numbers frame the month. First, speed: the median home went under contract in 41 days, five days faster than a year ago, and sellers received 95.1% of original list price. Second, supply: a balanced market is generally considered about 5.5 months of inventory, and Palm Beach County single family homes now sit well below that at 3.7.

If You Are Selling

This is a strong seller's market, but it is rewarding preparation rather than optimism. Sellers received 95.1% of original list price on average, which means buyers are still negotiating roughly 5% off asking. Homes priced to today's comparables are the ones capturing the 12.7% rise in closed sales.

- Inventory is down 23.3% year over year - a well-prepared listing faces less competition than it has in several years
- The median home went under contract in 41 days; pricing right the first time is what keeps you on that pace
- 41% of buyers are paying cash - expect stronger offers, but vet proof of funds carefully
- Professional photography, fresh paint and pre-listing inspections still separate top-dollar sales from the rest

If You Are Buying

Buyers face more competition than a year ago, but this is not the frenzy of 2021-2022. A 41-day median time to contract means you still have room to see a home, do diligence and write a considered offer - you just cannot sit on the fence for weeks on a well-priced property.

- With supply at 3.7 months and falling, waiting has a price: the median home cost $46,840 more than last July
- Cash purchases rose 24.4% - financed buyers should have full underwriting pre-approval, not just pre-qualification
- Late summer is historically the best negotiating window before seasonal demand returns in October
- Sellers are still conceding about 5% from original list on average - there is room to negotiate on homes with longer market time

What to Watch Through Fall 2026

If the last two years are a guide, inventory will stay tight through the summer and new listings will build again in September ahead of season. That makes the next 60-90 days a window: buyers get their best leverage of the year, while sellers who list now face the least competition. Interest-rate moves will matter most in the financed mid-market; the heavy cash share at higher price points insulates that segment. If the 3.7-month supply trend holds, expect continued upward pressure on prices into 2027.
