June 2026 at a Glance

The Palm Beach County condo and townhome market showed clear signs of a turn this June. Closed sales rose 18.6% over June 2025 and active inventory fell 19% — the first sustained absorption of the supply that built up through 2024–2025. The median sale price edged up 3.2% to $325,000. At 7.2 months of supply, this is still a market where buyers hold leverage, but the direction of travel now favors sellers.

The standout number is cash: 572 of 974 closings — nearly 59% — were cash purchases, up 23.3% from a year ago. Cash buyers are stepping in at the bottom of the pricing cycle, which is typically how condo market recoveries begin.

If You Are Selling

Demand is clearly back — closed sales rose 18.6% — but with 7.2 months of supply, buyers can still compare your unit against plenty of alternatives. The units that are selling share the same profile: priced to today's comparables, well-presented, and backed by clean association paperwork.

- Sellers received 92.7% of original list price on average — overpricing by 10% means chasing the market down for months
- The median unit took 68 days to go under contract — build that timeline into your plans and price to beat it
- Buildings with completed milestone inspections, funded reserves, and stable HOA fees are commanding a clear premium
- Have HOA financials, budget, and rental policy ready before listing — today's buyers ask on day one

If You Are Buying

This is the best buyer's window in Palm Beach County right now — and the data says it is starting to close. Inventory is down 19% from last year and sales are accelerating. Buyers who move this summer get selection and negotiating room that likely will not exist once supply tightens further.

- 7.2 months of supply means real choice and real leverage — sellers are conceding about 7% from original list on average
- Prices are rising modestly (+3.2%), not falling — waiting for a crash has cost condo buyers money two years running
- Nearly 59% of purchases are cash; financed buyers should get condo-project approval started early, as not every building qualifies for every loan type
- Scrutinize HOA budgets, reserve funding, and any pending special assessments — we review these on every purchase

What to Watch Through Fall 2026

The condo and townhome market is in the early stages of rebalancing. If absorption continues at June's pace, months of supply could approach balanced territory (around 5.5 months) by season's start in October–November. Watch three things: whether inventory keeps falling through the summer, how buildings complete their milestone inspection and reserve requirements, and insurance costs — the buildings that have their paperwork in order are increasingly trading like a separate, stronger market. Buyers get their best leverage now; sellers in well-run buildings are already seeing the shift.
