June 2026 at a Glance

The Palm Beach County single family home market posted one of its strongest months in years this June. Closed sales jumped nearly 25% over June 2025 while active inventory fell almost 24% — a combination that pushed the median sale price to $700,000, up 11.8% year-over-year. At 3.9 months of supply, the single family market has moved firmly into seller’s-market territory.

Two numbers tell the story. First, cash: 645 of 1,482 closings — roughly 44% — were paid in cash, up 32.7% from a year ago. Second, supply: a balanced market is generally considered about 5.5 months of inventory, and Palm Beach County single family homes now sit well below that at 3.9.

If You Are Selling

This is the strongest seller backdrop in several years — but the market is rewarding preparation, not just listing. Sellers received 94.7% of original list price on average, which means buyers are still negotiating roughly 5% off asking. Homes priced to today's comparables are the ones capturing the 24.9% surge in closed sales.

- Inventory is down 23.6% year-over-year — well-prepared listings face less competition than any June since 2022
- The median home went under contract in 42 days — pricing right the first time keeps you on that pace
- Nearly half of buyers are paying cash — expect stronger offers, but vet proof of funds carefully
- Professional photography, fresh paint, and pre-listing inspections still separate top-dollar sales from the rest

If You Are Buying

Buyers face more competition than a year ago, but the market is not the frenzy of 2021–2022. A 42-day median time to contract means you still have room to see a home, do diligence, and write a considered offer — you just can't sit on the fence for weeks on a well-priced property.

- With supply at 3.9 months and falling, waiting has a price: the median home cost $74,000 more than last June
- Cash purchases rose 32.7% — financed buyers should have full underwriting pre-approval, not just pre-qualification
- Summer (July–September) is historically the best negotiating window before seasonal demand returns in October
- Sellers are still conceding ~5% from original list on average — there is room to negotiate on homes with longer market time

What to Watch Through Fall 2026

If the last two years are a guide, inventory will stay tight through the summer and new listings will build again in September ahead of season. That makes the next 60–90 days a window: buyers get their best leverage of the year, while sellers who list now face the least competition. Interest-rate moves will matter most in the financed mid-market; the heavy cash share at higher price points insulates that segment. If the 3.9-month supply trend holds, expect continued upward pressure on prices into 2027.
